ABSTRACT

The present invention relates to a method of statistical synthesis and analysis of historical data. More specifically, embodiments of the present invention describe a process by which a series of data or indices is generated from a set of historical data, which summarize the statistical characteristics of the historical data and which are used in conjunction with other statistical methods to estimate future trends based on the historical data.